Checking the Weather

Matt Alias - 2026-11-10 - Commentaire (1) - Chapter 1: Planning Your Trip

The weather can change quickly, especially in the hills. A short check before you leave and another on the way can keep a good day from turning into a difficult one.

What to look for

Do not stop at the headline forecast. The details tell you far more about how the day will feel.

- Wind speed and direction, because wind makes cold air feel much colder
- The chance and timing of rain, not just whether it will rain
- Temperature at the top of the hill, which is usually lower than at the bottom
- Visibility, which matters most on open ground with few landmarks

When to turn back

Question

How do you know when it is time to turn back? Decide the answer before you set out. A simple rule is to turn back if you have used half your time and are not yet halfway to your goal.

Plan a shorter option from the start. Knowing there is an easy way down makes it much easier to make a sensible decision when the clouds roll in.

Recording your plan

Leave your route and your expected return time with someone you trust. A simple message like the example below works well.

Route: Hill circuit via the north ridge
Leaving: 08:30, back by 16:00
Group: 3 adults
If I have not checked in by 18:00, please call the mountain rescue.

Tip: send a quick message when you are back so nobody worries.
